

Saturday Sale!

$1.25 Window Draperies 98c
$1.50 Window Draperies 98c

These are of the newest ideas in window drapery. They are far superior to the common lace or bobbinet curtains. Do not show soil as easily, launder with less trouble and are much more serviceable. A very practical Curtain for most any room, particularly a dining-room. Three yards long, one yard and a quarter wide, with fringe at one end. Come in four different patterns at $1.25 and $1.50 per pair. We put in this whole line as a special Saturday at only 98c

Mr. X.—"Well—" Mr. B.—"Anything but 'well.' Now, see here. $200.11 a year equals $5000 protection. In 17 years that protection paid up for life or the full amount for yourself end of 25 years. Every dollar absolutely saved—protection for Mrs. X. Making a forced sale unnecessary, probably saving in addition as much as the policy amounts to." Ballard & Co., reliable insurance.

LAW POINTS.

A false statement by a merchant to a mercantile agency may be offered in evidence, in connection with other representations, to show fraud in the purchase of merchandise. (55 Atl. Rep. 614.)

An agreement, subsequent to a contract of sale, to execute another instrument setting forth a promise not to re-engage in the same business, etc., is without consideration and not enforceable unless there is something paid for same. (55 Atl. Rep. 109.)

Where a trademark contains false representation with respect to the article on which it is used it will not be protected by a court of equity, and it is immaterial that the article is just as good as that which it falsely represented it to be. (123 Fed. Rep. 568.)

KINGS AND QUEENS.

King Carlos of Portugal has the reputation of being a great athlete.

King Edward is said to have no fewer than eight well known doubles in and around the city of London.

Queen Alexandra has had a replica made of Mr. Hughes' portrait of her in her coronation robes and will send it as a gift to the capital of her native country.

Queen Olga of Greece is seldom heard of outside her own little kingdom, but she is adored within it. She takes the greatest interest in hospital work and nursing, and she finds much pleasure in acting as matchmaker to her poorer subjects. She has provided out of her own purse hundreds of dowries for peasant girls.

An International Japanese Lantern. A favorite design for lanterns used in the processions to celebrate the Japanese victories is one having on its four sides the rising sun, the union jack, the Italian flag and the stars and stripes.

WEALTHY BUSINESS WOMAN

Pen Picture of Mrs. Walker, Inheritor of the Weightman Millions.

Mrs. Anne M. Weightman Walker, who by the terms of the will of her father, the late William Weightman of Philadelphia, receives his vast fortune of $50,000,000 without condition, ranks as one of the richest women in the world, says the New York World. As surviving partner and sole heir she will continue the enormous business of Powers & Weightman, with the details of which she is thoroughly familiar.

Like her father, she makes every minute count, and there is not a detail that escapes her observation. Questions follow one another in rapid succession when there is anything she wants to know, and the men who have been trained in the office of the Powers & Weightman factories know that their answer must be ready as soon as the question is asked. Mrs. Walker is at her desk and actually at work when the time check clock strikes 8. As her father was carried on the payroll as a chemist, so is she numbered among the salaried employees.

Hair of a red tinge is worn on the top of her head, waving over the temples and caught up behind the ears in a coil. Her eyes are blue and the expression of her face is kindly. Her nose is not a pronounced feature, but it is individual in its length from the bridge of the eyes to its rounded tip, with just the faintest suggestion of a tilt. Men and women who have known her for years and have had business and social relations with her say that the occasions when she has shown any mental perturbation are rare indeed. Her laugh is a chuckle that invites one to smile. It is not the rippling mirth of the young woman, though the traces of dimples are discernable when the lips are parted and the eyes twinkle in merriment. The lips are as red as those of a schoolgirl, though at times they are drawn out of their rounded fullness by a habit Mrs. Walker has of compressing them when she is thinking. The only harsh feature about the face is the chin. It is almost masculine in its squareness and gives an abrupt termination to the otherwise oval shape of the full face view. In a profile the chin is pointed, though it does not extend beyond the mouth line, and the lower lip is firmly set.

Mrs. Walker is a widow and childless. She is about fifty years of age and lives a quiet and methodical life in her mansion at Philadelphia. She has few pleasures or diversions. Her closest confidant is her constant companion, Miss Norris, who is younger than the heiress. Her home life is simple. She arises early, and business engrosses all of her attention throughout the day, her practice having been to divide her time between her home and the office of Powers & Weightman. She has automobiles of the electric type. She dines at 6 o'clock each evening and, except for Miss Norris, seldom has company at her dinner table. From the end of the dinner until 8 o'clock she reads.

Sea Gulls.

If a convoy of sea gulls flies seaward early in the morning sailors and fishermen know the day will be fine and the wind fair, but if the birds keep inland, though there be no haze hanging out toward the sea to denote unpleasant weather, interested folk know that the elements will be unfavorable.

Old Life in Maryland.

Schaff, in his "History of Maryland," says that in the eighteenth century "the mechanics, fishermen, bay sailors and petty tradesmen took a turn in the tobacco fields at planting time or helped in the wheat harvest or in pulling or husking corn."

Notice.

Having sold my business to M. L. Walker, I shall for a short time have office room at the store for the purpose of collecting my bills. All accounts must be settled by Sept. 25th, as after that date I shall be obliged to leave same with an attorney for collection. J. W. Holton, 159 No. Main street, Hale block.
